

Matej Bračič is a post-doctoral researcher at the University of Maribor, Faculty of mechanical engineering and Laboratory for characterisation and processing of polymers. His topic evolves around polysaccharide-based nano-material manufacturing, primarily for biomedical applications. The materials range from nano surface-coatings to nano-particles. His current focus lies in composite coatings based on mixtures of polysaccharides and biomolecules for protein repellence and improved cell proliferation.